Worker Safety at Small Companies in the Plastics Processing Industry

In a recent published article in Plastic News (August 10, 2020), the safety statistics of the plastics industry for 2018, per BLS statistics, small industry companies with between 50 and 249 employees had higher injury rates than similar industry companies with 250 employees or more.

In the article in the Plastics News, some of the reasons given for the higher injury rates include...Read more...

Virtual Training During and After the Pandemic

In this time of change due to the COVID-19 Pandemic, there have been many operational changes in every industry. One of the things that changed significantly has been how training has been delivered regardless of the topic or the audience.

For most companies, participating in virtual training is not a significant financial investment as it can be done on individual laptops or tablets by simply downloading an app. However, it is a significant financial investment for the training organization which may be a company or an independent Instructor. Because of the significant investment, many elements need to be considered before the investment is made.
